PREFACE

IN this book are indexed the contents of four hundred and fifty volumes, comprising standard and popular collections of poetry, recitations (both prose and verse), orations, drills, dialogues, selections from dramas, etc., all in print at the time of compilation, and the majority to be found on the shelves of any good-sized public library. The list includes over fifty thousand titles.

The INDEX does not claim to list all recitations extant, but few popular ones will be sought in vain; and beyond this the collections indexed include many books and selections useful to study clubs, teachers, and students of all ages. It has been the endeavor to trace selections to their sources where means were available, and to indicate the correct title among several when possible.

An Appendix has been added, which will be of especial use to teachers and pupils. This Appendix gives lists of selections suitable for Arbor Day, Lincoln's Birthday, and other special days; also lists of drills, tableaux, etc., and temperance selections.

Chicago, December, 1918.

The Publishers.

EXPLANATORY NOTE

The TITLE INDEX is the main index, and references in the FIRST LINE and AUTHOR INDEXES apply to this. A KEY TO SYMBOLS has been provided, so arranged that the library numbers of the books can be inserted after the symbols.

In explanation of the arrangement of titles, it is only necessary to say that a title indented under the main title entry is either the same piece under a different title or an abridgment or selection from it, as indicated.

Such titles as "Lullaby," "Song," "Sonnet," etc., are arranged by authors, the first line attached being merely to assist in identification, and not affecting the order of arrangement.

The FIRST LINE INDEX includes the first lines not only of the complete poem or recitation, but of the abridgments and selections also.

NOTE—The catalogue prices given in this list are taken from the publisher's catalogues at the time of going to press—November, 1918. List prices, however, are constantly changing because of war conditions and other reasons; they must be taken, therefore, as an approximate guide only. Some "out of print" books are included in the Index for the reason that most of them are on the shelves of the larger public libraries and in constant use.
